THE STORY

It is Halloween night in Hallow's Hollow, a clearing of dead oaks, crooked graves and jack-o'-lanterns, and one of the people you came in with is Slenderman, witch's hat and all. Eight witch's potions are hidden among the chapel, the graveyard, the scarecrow field and the other landmarks. The survivors have ten minutes to gather all eight. Slenderman has ten minutes to stop them.

You play it together, over voice chat, in the dark. Survivors choose between staying close for safety and splitting up to cover more ground, sweeping the hollow by flashlight while the battery drains and static creeps in at the edge of the screen. Whoever drew the monster plays by other rules. They blink across the map, put out the lanterns the others steer by, and get faster with every potion found.

This is the Halloween cut of Slender: same rules, a new map built for the season. Rounds are short, run in the browser with nothing to install, and hide the potions somewhere new every time, so one match rolls into the next. Bring two to eight people for a Halloween social, or face a CPU Slenderman on your own first.
