THE STORY

Eight pages are nailed to the ruins scattered through a dead night forest, and one of the people you came in with is Slenderman. The survivors have ten minutes to find all eight and get out. Slenderman has ten minutes to make sure they never do.

You play it together, over voice chat, in the dark. Survivors decide whether to stick close for safety or split up to cover more ground, sweeping the woods by flashlight while the battery ticks down and the static starts to crawl at the edge of the screen. Whoever drew the monster plays by other rules. They blink across the map and snuff out the lanterns the others steer by, and every page found makes them faster. Nobody is safe for long.

Rounds are short and rounds are loud. It reads in seconds, runs in the browser with nothing to install, and reshuffles the page locations every time, so one match rolls straight into the next. Bring two to eight people and a Halloween mood, or take on a CPU Slenderman by yourself first.
