THE STORY

Fire the Vibecoder! is a hidden-role party game wearing the skin of a corporate layoff platform. It signs your group into a fake professional network, hands everyone a secret job title, and slips a Vibecoder or two onto the team: the people who shipped something untested to prod on a Friday and blamed the tooling. Everyone else just wants to catch them before the sprint ends.

Play it around a table or over a call, because almost all of it is talking. There is one short night where the platform runs its business in the dark, then the standup opens and the accusations start. You defend your own record, you poke holes in everyone else's, and the group slowly decides who looks most like the person torching the codebase. When the clock runs out the team casts a single vote and fires one colleague. Nobody solves it alone. The whole game lives in what people say and how nervously they say it.

The voice is deadpan LinkedIn all the way down: promoted posts from an HR bot, #OpenToWork ribbons on whoever gets managed out, profile headlines like 'VP of Vibes, turning coffee into roadmaps.' A round is quick and a little chaotic, and most groups want another one straight away. It plays fine with people who never touch board games, and it lands hardest on anyone who has lived through a real reorg.

HOW IT PLAYS

- 1 Start or join a workspace
 One person taps New game and gets a short code; everyone else types that code with their name to join.
- 2 Get your secret title
 The host picks the role lineup, or hits Auto setup, and starts the round.
- 3 Get through the night
 The platform goes dark for one short after-hours phase while a few roles take their secret turns.
- 4 Work the standup
 The feed reopens and a timer starts.
- 5 Cast one vote
 When time is up the calibration meeting opens.
- 6 Read the reveal and run it back
 The platform shows who everyone actually was, which side won, and posts the fired colleague's cheery layoff announcement.
